ABSTRACT

"Welfare to work" is an issue in the substance abuse field because of the high number of people on welfare who have a substance abuse problem. One-fourth of women on welfare either abuse or are addicted to alcohol or other drugs. For women ages 18-24 the incidence is as high as 37%, according to the Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse. Community groups need to work with welfare to work programs so that substance abuse intervention and treatment is included. If treatment needs are not addressed, it will be difficult for substance abusing persons to succeed in these programs. This paper provides tips and resources to help communities undertake the needed steps to reduce substance use and abuse. It lists national organizations, publications, and the names of community leaders who have expertise in the welfare to work areas. (JDM)

Description of the Issue

Welfare to work is an issue in the substance abuse field because a high percentage of people who are on welfare have a substance abuse problem. According to a study by the Center on Addiction and Substance Abuse released in 1994, one-quarter of women on welfare abuse or are addicted to alcohol or other drugs. For women ages 18-24, the incidence is higher at thirty-seven percent. Therefore, community groups need to work with welfare to work programs so that substance abuse intervention and treatment is included. Substance abusing persons will not have success in the welfare to work program if their treatment needs are not addressed.

What follows is a list of national organizations, publications, community leaders with an expertise in the welfare to work area, and community stories.

Community Stories:

Oregon shows success integrating welfare and treatment. Alcoholism and Drug Abuse Weekly, July 19, 1999. Strong state leadership and a clear vision of the role of alcohol and drug treatment as part of the transition to employment facilitated the creation of an infrastructure for integrating alcohol and drug treatment into a work-oriented welfare program at the local level. The state made local welfare offices accountable for addressing alcohol and drug problems among their clients. Contact the Adult and Family Services Division of the Oregon Department of Human Resources at 503-945-5601.

The State of California has developed a number of initiatives that integrate welfare to work and substance abuse treatment through its CALWORKS program. Substance abuse treatment has been identified in CalWORKs as a support service which will be necessary to assist some CalWORKs recipients to become job ready and subsequently, to retain those jobs. Collaboration between the County Welfare Departments and the county alcohol and drug programs is a required component of CalWORKs to ensure that a system is available to provide substance abuse services to those recipients whose substance abuse problem creates a barrier to employment. Contact the California Department of Alcohol and Drug Programs at 916-324-5521.

The City of Chicago has received $8.7 million to enable the Office of Alcoholism and Substance Abuse to provide substance abuse screening, assessments and treatment to an additional 2,600 Temporary Assistance for Needy Families (TANF) recipients beginning in October, 1999. Studies estimate 15% - 25% could benefit from substance abuse treatment. Contact Susan Weed at 312-747-9447.
